

THIS volume is affectionately dedicated to the memory of my father, L. W. D. Jerman, M. D., who passed away January 3, 1915, after having followed the practice of medicine for a period of nearly fifty years. He used medical batteries as far back as I can remember and began the use of X-Ray as soon as it was available. It was he who first attracted my attention to medical electricity, now called Physical Therapy, by providing me with the opportunity to tinker with and repair batteries when out of order. His interest in my chosen field of work and in my success in this field was all that a father's could be.
